FROM THE FATHERS
Pentecost and our Baptism

For in the case of the apostles too, there was a "sound of a mighty wind", and visions of fiery tongues appeared, but not for the apostles sake, but because of the Jews who were then present. Nevertheless, even though no sensible signs take place, we receive the things that have been once manifested by them. Since the dove itself at that time therefore appeared, that as in place of a finger (so to say) it might point out to them that were present, and to John, the Son of God. Not however merely on this account, but to teach you also, that upon you no less at your baptism the Spirit comes. But since then we have no need of sensible vision, faith sufficing instead of all. For signs are "not for them that believe but for them that believe not".

St John Chrysostom (344/354-407)
